Moderately Prepared

Risk Profile

You already have strong, practical strengths (digital, medical/caregiving, languages, and teaching) and a solid baseline of supplies, which is a real advantage when you're protecting both yourself and your dependent. The biggest pressure point is unstable income with only a short financial runway, which makes job loss and inflation feel heavier—especially while managing a chronic condition. Your success vision ("a few steady passive income streams, a new steady primary income stream, and physical fitness massively improved") is achievable if the plan prioritizes income stability and health support first, then builds redundancy (money, supplies, and people) for bigger disruptions like grid failure or conflict-related instability.

Social Support Critical

0/100

- You're built for emotional regulation. When it comes to keeping decisions clear when emotions are running high, you're already ahead of most people — this is a real asset in a crisis.
- The gap to build: social support. In a sustained disruption, drawing on your network when you need it most becomes the pressure point — not a weakness, but the next thing to strengthen.

Composite Mental Resilience Score

Use this as a springboard — your mental resilience supports ambitious action. Push into the growth-oriented items in your plan.

Critical Vulnerabilities

- 1 Unstable income with only ~4 months of savings runway, making job loss and inflation hard to absorb
- 2 Limited trusted network and no community involvement, reducing help options during illness, shortages, or disruptions
- 3 Chronic condition affecting daily function, increasing dependency on stable routines, medication access, and support
- 4 Only modest supply depth (under a month), leaving exposure to supply chain disruption or short outages
- 5 Cyber risk exposure (devices, accounts, banking) that could quickly block income, benefits, and access to money

CRITICAL

Protect your runway with a bare-minimum budget and trigger rules

Write a one-page plan: essentials only budget, which bills get paid first, what gets paused, and the exact trigger (for example: income drops by 20% or a contract ends). Put it where you can act fast.

Increase your buffer from 4 to 6 months of essential costs (Bucharest-based)

Use your real monthly essentials as the benchmark. Set an automatic transfer in RON right after payday; even small amounts build momentum. Direct any extra income or refunds to the buffer until you reach 6 months.

HIGH

Build a two-track income plan (stable job + quick-start service)

Track A: stable role aligned with your best skills. Track B: a service you can start quickly with low physical strain (online tutoring, translation, remote admin/support). Set weekly targets and review results every Sunday.

Launch one starter passive income product within 45 days

Choose one: templates, mini course, language packs, caregiving guide. Publish a first version, get feedback from 10 people, and improve it once. Aim for learning and repeatability, not perfection.

MEDIUM

Create a crisis cash plan for short disruptions

Keep a small amount of cash in RON at home for 3–7 days of basic needs, and store it securely. Write down bank freeze steps and emergency numbers so you can act even if digital systems are down.

Review insurance and high-impact contracts

Check home coverage and any health-related coverage for gaps that could become expensive during disruptions. Renegotiate subscriptions and utilities to lower your essential monthly baseline.
